

Andy Flores

Andy Flores grew up in Fayetteville, NC as an Army brat. After a chance encounter with a few Marine-option Midshipmen while enjoying a nice cup of “iced tea” at a “fraternal gathering” shortly after arriving at UNC, Andy enrolled in Naval ROTC and earned a three-year scholarship. Andy graduated Phi Beta Kappa with a B.A. in Geography in 1995 and was commissioned a Marine second lieutenant. Following four years of active duty as an infantry and intelligence officer at 2d BN, 6th Marines as the Scout Sniper Platoon Commander and Headquarters and Service Company Executive Officer and II MEF as the Ground Sensor Platoon Commander, Andy transitioned to the Individual Ready Reserve and the civilian world. Over the next six years, Andy held a variety of progressive supply chain leadership positions at McMaster-Carr, a multibillion-dollar industrial supply company, and obtained an M.B.A. from Goizueta Business School at Emory University. Following graduate school, Andy became a management consultant in 2005 at ScottMadden, Inc. where he continues to serve as a partner and the corporate practice leader. Andy is privileged to serve executive teams from many companies in the U.S. as well as internationally to help them address some of their most difficult challenges. His primary specialties are supply chain management, strategic and business planning, shared services implementation, and operations improvement.

Andy is a Life Member of the UNC General Alumni Association and the UNC NROTC Alumni Association. He is married to the former Elizabeth Sulecki (PharmD, UNC School of Pharmacy, Class of 1998), and they currently reside in Roswell, GA. Andy and Elizabeth have two children – Samantha and Alex. Samantha is also following the Tar Heel tradition as a member of the Class of 2025.
